Pathways to university

UCalgary has dedicated admission pathways for Indigenous learners. If you self-identify as Indigenous on your initial application, you will first be considered under our general admission process. Then, if needed, you will automatically be considered for the following pathways.

General Admission

For high school applicants, each program has five courses required for admission. These are used to calculate your admission average.

See the courses required for each program, as well as an estimated competitive admission average, by selecting a program from our Explore Programs page:

ucalgary.ca/future-students/undergraduate/explore-programs

PATHWAY 1

Indigenous Admission Process

If you meet admission course requirements but are below the competitive admission average, you can be considered if you are within 10% (0.5 GPA for transfer students) of the annual admission average.

A minimum of a 70% admission average (2.0 GPA for transfer students) is required.

PATHWAY 2

Indigenous Supplementary Process

Students who submit a personal statement and any faculty-specific supplemental requirements are considered for admission by a faculty-specific admission committee.

Bridging programs to prepare students who don't meet the course requirements are available for some programs.

PATHWAY 3

Indigenous Student Access Program (ISAP)

This one-year program provides an alternative admission route into your desired program. You'll take mandatory first-year classes as well as classes relevant to your target degree program.

(Courses may apply toward degree programs.)

ISAP highlights:

- 1:1 academic advising
- Academic skill development
- Cultural workshops
- Leadership training
- Supportive community

! Self-identify on your application to receive additional supports and resources:

✔ Admission process support	📅 Notifications about social or cultural events
👤 Eligibility for Indigenous-specific financial awards	💬 Academic advising

"I entered UCalgary having barely graduated high school, convinced that it would be nearly impossible for me to ever become a post-secondary student. Through the incredible support of the alternate pathways program based out of Writing Symbols Lodge, the Indigenous Student Access Program, I became equipped to excel throughout my time at UCalgary."

This book features cover art by local artist BB Iskeww (Kayla Bellerose), a fine arts graduate from UCalgary.

"For me, being a student away from home and my family helped me with my independence but also came with many challenges – like feeling isolated at times and missing my support system. I'm grateful I was able to join initiatives at the Writing Symbols Lodge such as meaningful employment with the Otahpiimisskaan Indigenous Youth Leadership Program when I was a student at UCalgary. I was able to find a sense of community and friends that felt like family support."
